während der Pandemie:

The treemap visualization displays a hierarchical structure of a large dataset. The root of the hierarchy is represented by the largest, lightest gray block on the left. This block is subdivided into several major categories, each represented by a distinct shade of gray. These categories are further subdivided into smaller, more granular sections, creating a dense and complex layout. The overall structure is hierarchical, with the largest blocks representing the most significant categories and the smaller blocks representing more specific sub-categories. The visualization is composed of several large rectangular blocks of varying shades of gray, representing different categories or clusters. The blocks are arranged in a hierarchical manner, with some blocks being further subdivided into smaller, more granular sections. The overall layout is dense and complex, reflecting the large size of the dataset.
